Volume I.

Introduction [129-134]

The standardization of the English language must be regarded as a problem of increasing urgency. The current state of affairs is characterized by a remarkable diversity and discrepancy in the pronunciation and spelling of words, which seriously impedes communication and hinders the progress of scholarship and learning.

In the field of pronunciation, it is essential to establish clear and consistent rules that would enable individuals to understand and be understood without ambiguity. The problem of standardization in spelling is equally pressing, as variations in orthography can create confusion and delay in the dissemination of knowledge.

The goal of standardizing the English language is not merely to achieve linguistic uniformity but also to foster a sense of national unity. By promoting a common standard, it is hoped that communication will become more efficient, error-free, and accessible to all speakers of the language.

In conclusion, the pursuit of standardization in the English language represents a significant step towards enhancing the clarity and coherence of our linguistic practices, thereby contributing to the broader goals of education, scholarship, and the advancement of human knowledge.
