The Nation

[Vol. 61, No. 866

14

The Nation

July 4, 1893

The Nation

the church of philosophy, bought for it straightly all his life long, with that sort of thought in his heart, a sort of complicity with the New England world—all this is a sort of sidestep from the life of philosophy, and the quality of the life that has been spent in the name of philosophy.

The Nation

in the church of philosophy, bought for it straightly all his life long, with that sort of thought in his heart, a sort of complicity with the New England world—all this is a sort of sidestep from the life of philosophy, and the quality of the life that has been spent in the name of philosophy.

The Nation

in the church of philosophy, bought for it straightly all his life long, with that sort of thought in his heart, a sort of complicity with the New England world—all this is a sort of sidestep from the life of philosophy, and the quality of the life that has been spent in the name of philosophy.