PUBLIC INSTRUCTION IN ANTEBELLUM IRELAND.

To the Editor of The Nation.

Sir,—In my review of Mr. Stanley Weyman's novel, "The Red Umbrella," I intimated that the author is in error in stating that the French present of 1834 was absolute without education. Your next review states that most French writers tell us that he was better educated under the regime of the American Republic than before the revolution.

No authority is given for this assertion, which is a singular one, to be sure: I mean, it must have been true of many if not all your readers. I wish to quote the opinion held by a most competent authority, M. M. R. Edouard F.
