[Vol. 55, No. 1613]

The Nation

Let's not confuse the work of the scientist with that of the doctor. The former must work quite consistently with the controlled variables of the experiment, while the latter must deal with the unpredictable variables of the patient. The scientist is more of a mathematician, while the doctor is more of a biologist. They are both essential, but they serve different purposes. The scientist is more interested in the cause of the disease, while the doctor is more interested in the cure.
