The Nation

Aug. 1, 1917

95

The Nation's financial needs are so pressing that it is urgent to find ways of increasing our exports. In order to do this, we must make the most of our agricultural resources. The government has already taken steps to promote agricultural exports. These steps have been successful, and we expect to see an increase in our exports of agricultural products in the near future.

The government is also taking steps to promote industrial exports. It is planning to invest a large sum of money in new factories and to provide incentives for the production of manufactured goods. These steps are expected to result in a significant increase in our exports of manufactured goods.

The government is also working to improve our infrastructure, particularly in the areas of transportation and communication. This will make it easier for our goods to reach foreign markets and will help to stimulate further growth in our exports.

In conclusion, the government is committed to promoting exports in order to strengthen our economy. With the steps it is taking, we can expect to see a significant increase in our exports in the near future.
The Nation

which was a quite independent development of the same ideas as those of Berkeley's Principles.

1853. Berkeley's "Principles of Human Knowledge."