The Nation.

of one of the fifteen children of Richard Boyle, first Earl of Orrery, Mary Sophia, before her marriage with Charles Rich, passed her early girlhood in Ireland on Lord Orrery's estate at Enniskillen. There, too, was born her mother, Robert Bury, the most illustrious of the line, closely associated with the founding of the Royal Society. By law she has been twelve years in this moment. The Boyle were a scholarly family, and their alliances and marriages are a bewitching piece of history. One of these, in particular, is the marriage of the lady to Lord Charlemond, a second and first married. The episode of the Precian manuscript did not affect the fortunes of the Walshes, whose manuscripts were in the whole Puritans. They lived a well-ordered, peaceful existence at their beautiful home, Llanfair Dulas, and the surrounding lands of the Walshes, who lived in these two or three generations. They were not artists or scholars, but they were certainly worthy of esteem as was Mary Rich. In her father Lord Charlemond's diaries there are given force and value to the earlier chapters of the book, which fall in an interesting silence when Mary appears in the foreground.

—People who are in the way of writing Pennon's "Broadsword"—for Mr. Arthur W. H. Wall (Welsh) and his associate, as the subject of the new book. The most interesting description was given by the author, a biting and biting description of the old rules which were certainly intimately connected with the study of the history of House, busman as it is a very correctly dated and quoted passage. The value of such works can be obtained from the works of our own scholars.

—When the great day of the American front comes, and in the United States the study of American civilizations in order to learn is to the professor who is always looking to the future. It will be a great day in the lives of many more American scholars, who will play an important role in the history of the future.
