The Nation.

March 23, 1905

The change in the ownership of the British Museum at last brings the venerable library of the Dominions into the society of the world's most beautiful libraries. In the brief period of a few months the British Museum has become one of the most distinguished of the great public libraries of Europe. The nation which had begun the collection and the nation which now owns it, are already beginning to feel the fact that the British Museum has become a possession of the people of the world. The idea of a national library, which was once a dream, is now a reality. The British Museum is not only a national library, but a universal library, a library for all peoples. The idea of a universal library is not new, but it is new in the sense that it is now realized and put into practice.

The British Museum has been the subject of much discussion and comment. Its grandeur and beauty have been the subject of praise and admiration. Its collections have been the subject of study and research. Its library has been the subject of wonder and delight. Its influence has been felt far and wide. Its fame has spread from one continent to another.

The British Museum is a symbol of the power and influence of the British nation. It is a symbol of the wealth and richness of the British people. It is a symbol of the culture and civilization of the British nation. It is a symbol of the progress and development of the British world.

The British Museum is the embodiment of the British nation. It is the expression of the British people. It is the embodiment of the British culture. It is the expression of the British civilization.

The British Museum is not only a symbol of the British nation, but it is also a symbol of the world. It is a symbol of the unity of the world. It is a symbol of the power of the world. It is a symbol of the culture of the world. It is a symbol of the civilization of the world.

The British Museum is a symbol of the world's progress. It is a symbol of the world's development. It is a symbol of the world's culture. It is a symbol of the world's civilization.

The British Museum is a symbol of the world's unity. It is a symbol of the world's power. It is a symbol of the world's culture. It is a symbol of the world's civilization.

The British Museum is a symbol of the world's progress. It is a symbol of the world's development. It is a symbol of the world's culture. It is a symbol of the world's civilization.